IdnEgo are Freud's psychoanalytic voices that influence all relationship decisions. Id, who represents the unconscious and licentiousness in all of us, rarely agrees with Ego, who touts the conscious and morally-aware course of action. Tune in each week to hear them face off against each other as they analyze your relationship and provide counsel.

Dear IdnEgo,

I am so embarrassed to be writing this, but I don't have anyone to talk to about it. I'm a freshman girl and when I got to college my roommate and I hit it off right away — we had a great time going down to frat parties, going out to dinner, playing Frisbee — just hanging out together. At first I didn't want to admit it, but recently I have found myself — I think — attracted to her. A couple of times we have hugged and it has felt really good - better than it should. Then, the weirdest thing, her boyfriend came to visit this weekend and seeing them together and fooling around got me really jealous!!! I consider myself a totally normal girl and I definitely still like boys. But this is wiggling me out! What's going on?

—A little confused and more worried

Dear "little confused and more worried,"

Hey — I don't know what's going on either, but Id is getting turned on more than usual. Listen,

At first I didn't want to admit it, but recently I've found myself — I think — attracted to her. A couple of times we have hugged and it's felt really good — better than it should.

college is about experimenting — and the laboratory of "life" can be a lot more interesting, educational (and kinky) than your chem lab. Remember Id's perspective — if it feels right do it! Ok, so you're worried about freaking your roommate out — Id understands this. Here's what you do. This weekend tell your roommate that you want to spend a "girls" night out — the two of you go out have dinner, go dancing, and drink — a lot. Then come home and just give her a hug goodnight and a small kiss — see if she takes the bait. If she doesn't reciprocate simply let it go and in the morning tell her how drunk you were and how embarrassed you are. It'll be fine. By the way, Id would like to be there for moral support — yeah that's it — moral support — so send me an email and let me know the time and place!

In your best interest (and mine),
Id

Dear "little confused and more worried,"

CONGRATULATIONS! You're learning something that high school sex ed class forgot to mention: human sexuality is not always just about Adam & Eve. Sometimes it's just Eve and Eve, and Adam has to go play by himself and watch them have all the fun.

So you're a little wiggled out? Ego says this is absolutely a-ok. Emotions, especially for women, play a key role in determining attraction to another person. It is not surprising that you are feeling this way — it's probably the first time that you have lived with another woman with whom you're sharing all kinds of wonderful experiences.

Sexual attraction is normal. In fact, research finds that 1 out of every 3 women experience some sort of physical relationship with another woman during their college years. Having a sexual experience — whether it be hugging, kissing, or fondling — does not mean that you are gay. You are simply an open-minded person willing (unlike many others) to admit your feelings, explore them, and trying to understand them. What should you do? That's up to you, but Ego says take things slowly and simply enjoy exploring.

Your friend,
Ego
